INNSiDE Liverpool by Corstorphine & Wright

There is, thankfully, increasing interest in reusing 20th century buildings that in the past would thoughtlessly have been demolished. The former Echo newspaper offices have been cleverly adapted to hotel use and can be seen as an exemplar for what can be achieved through the considered reuse of post-war buildings. The main lobby is a well-considered and controlled transformation of the former newsroom, while the new rooftop addition, with its simple central planning, allows the stunning 360-degree view to do the talking.
